Chapter 2 by The Harlequeen

She protected all the small animals and the little seedlings. Her children were many for they were the entire Human Race.

For many years Mother Nature took care of the Humans, she fed them protected them and made them pretty things like rainbows and water falls. But most of all she loved them.

Oh woe is me for now I must tell a very sad tale indeed

Then the Human Race grew up, they no longer needed their mother, they built great skyscrapers and powerful vehicles. They discovered great things and even went to the moon. Mother nature was so proud of them. Except for one thing. They killed her. They forgot about her. They threw their garbage all over the place and poisoned her water and polluted her air and cut down her trees and hunted her animals. They killed her. She was dead.

Except for the one little bit of her that looked like a beautiful woman in gown of orange flowers. That bit of her was still alive, but who knows where she pleads for help, her dress wilted.
